The background of the slide is a blurred image of an artist's workspace. It features a white canvas with colorful, abstract brushstrokes in shades of blue, green, yellow, and red. In the foreground, there are several art supplies including a yellow highlighter, a blue highlighter, and a red highlighter, along with other markers and pens scattered on a wooden desk.

What do Artists do all day?

This is a series of documentaries where artists tell us what they do all day. It gives great insights into different artists' ways of working. It's inspiring because we get to see them working in their studios, making decisions and talking about their work, rather than just looking at pictures of their finished work in exhibitions. Click on the picture to see Tracey Emin at work

Bloomberg Brilliant Ideas

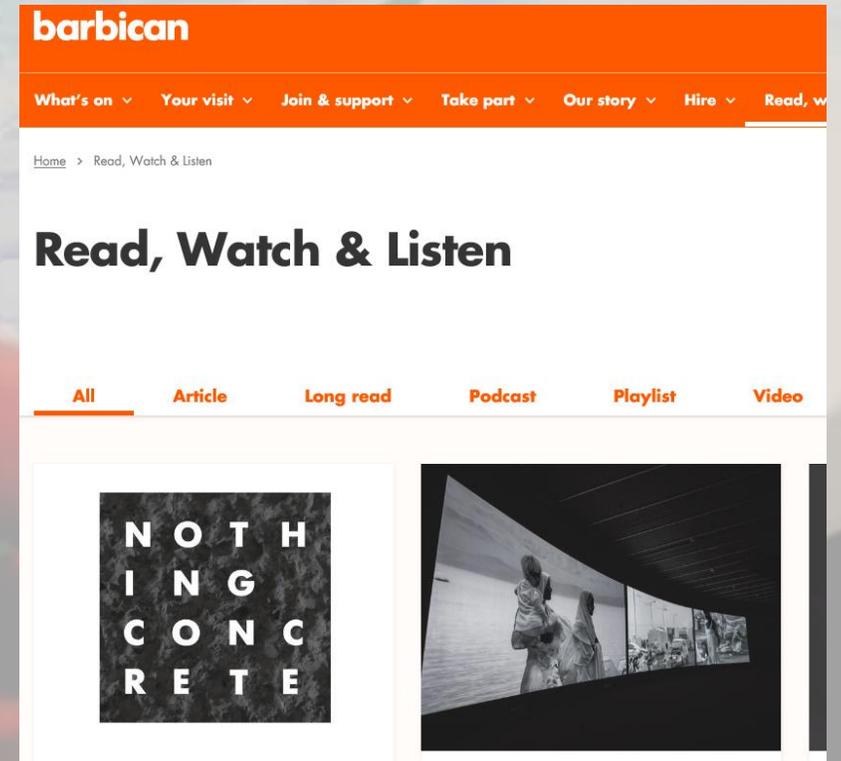

This extensive series of short videos covers artists discussing things like how to document life in photography, activism in art, how art can question politics, music and history, and the boundaries between reality and fiction. They are usually about 25 minutes long (so not too long) and cover a mind exploding range of themes to get you thinking and inspire your own work. Click on the picture to hear about South Africa's Picasso

Art Galleries

Click on the picture to go to this TimeOut article which has a list of links to virtual tours of museums and galleries that might be useful while you can't visit in person – you could visit museums all over the world over the summer from your living room!

The Barbican has great resources while they're closed. Try 'Read, watch, listen'. These podcasts, articles and videos cover a stunning range of themes including masculinity, the depiction of autism in cinema, graffiti and hip hop, and an introduction to abstract expressionism that features Lee Krasner who was a great abstract artist herself, as well as Jackson Pollock's wife. Click on the picture to go to the home page for 'Read, watch, listen' will give you so much choice you will want to watch, listen to and read at least three!

Baltic connect

The Tate Gallery

The Tate Gallery has brilliant resources for students, including careers advice, a series of features called 'Look Closer' which explore particular works of art, and a great classification system that can help you find artworks that relate to certain themes easily. So if you're not sure what artworks are out there that explore certain topics, say identity, if you put 'identity' into the search bar, a lot of different works on the theme will come up. If you click on an artwork that you like, underneath that artwork will be other works that relate to the one you liked. So you can find a lot of works quite quickly that all, in different ways, respond to particular themes. Click the picture

This programme shows six graduates from Central St Martins (a top Art School) creating new works of art in a competition using rules inspired by artists who taught at the Bauhaus. The Bauhaus was a groundbreaking art school that rewrote the rules for teaching and learning art. Everyone loves a challenge.

If you like art books and magazines and print, this is an alternative online resource of articles about contemporary fashion, photography, and all aspects of art and design.

Currently on TV, Click on the picture for the first episode, anything by artist Grayson Perry is worth a watch. He makes some complex issues about art very accessible and understandable. He has recorded a number of Radio and TV programmes on different aspects of art including subjects like identity, portraiture, and taking the mickey out of British prejudices. He has an alter ego 'Claire' and a teddy bear called Alan Measles. He also won the Turner Prize. Google him to find out more.
